

Project Atlas: Weekly Status Report

1. Review the project scope.
2. Confirm the delivery checklist.
 - 2.1 Check the nested task and its indentation.
3. Approve the final document.

Long paragraph

The project team prepares a weekly status report for colleagues across the United States. Each report explains what changed, what remains open, and who owns the next action. When a plain text file becomes a PDF, the words should remain readable, sentences should wrap within the page, and no line should disappear at a page boundary. A long paragraph must continue naturally without duplicating its last sentence or dropping the first words of the next page. Readers should be able to select a passage, copy it, and paste the same words into a text editor. This test uses ordinary office writing rather than special formatting commands, so a title is a line of text and a numbered list includes an indented subtask. The report also contains familiar punctuation used in business documents.
